Kevin M. Dewalt has over 15 years experience driving technology innovation in start-ups, large companies and the federal government. He has held leadership roles in all aspects of entrepreneurship including fundraising, product development, software engineering, business development/sales, and strategic marketing/brand development.

He is currently founder and CEO of ManyWheels, a start-up in the automotive logistics space funded by the National Science Foundation.

At In-Q-Tel, the investing arm of the Central Intelligence Agency, Mr. Dewalt helped make over $20M of venture investments into 25 technology start-ups. Through his relationships with government executives he also helped the CEOs and management teams in these start-ups deploy their products to the federal market.

Mr. Dewalt founded Soapbox.com, a start-up subsidiary company he incubated in The Motley Fool. He built the consumer online marketplace from the ground-up after securing $2M in funding.

As a member of the “new ventures” team at NASD, Mr. Dewalt developed the business plans to commercialize the company’s regulatory applications and lead a 35-person worldwide engineering team that regulates the NASDAQ Stock Market.

He began his career as an engineer and project manager with the US Coast Guard and DMW Worldwide, a start-up telecom software company.

Mr. Dewalt received a BS in Electrical Engineering from the US Coast Guard Academy where he was the #1 graduate in his class and an MS in EE from Stanford University.

He is also prominent in the Washington DC technology community as a former board member of the New Media Society and panel reviewer for investments by the National Science Foundation. He also holds a Top Secret US Security Clearance.

Although his lifelong ambition is to play professional golf – a dream cut short at birth by an utter lack of talent – he loves the game and plays regularly with his wife in Arlington.
